INNOVATIVE TREATMENTS FOR AORTIC VALVE REPLACEMENT

February 4th, 2012 – 8 am to 2 pm

Li Ka Shing Center for Learning and Knowledge, Stanford, CA

STATEMENT OF NEED

To ethically evaluate and treat patients for transcatheter surgical aortic valve replacement versus traditional open chest surgery, physicians should understand the progression of aortic stenosis, be up to date with the latest innovative treatments, and appropriately assess ethical issues related to surgical procedures for high risk patients. This conference is designed to educate physicians on all of these subjects.

TARGET AUDIENCE

This national course is intended to meet the specialty and subspecialty needs of interventional cardiologists, cardiothoracic surgeons, cardiologists, nurse practitioners, and related allied health professionals.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

1. Assess the prevalence of aortic stenosis in the elderly and appraise the corresponding impact of therapy on quality of life.
2. Develop screening procedures for patients and develop inclusions and exclusions for treatment.
3. Identify pertinent ethical issues that may affect treatment options and strategies to address them in practice.
4. Provide treatment recommendations and/or referral resources for your patients.

ACCREDITATION

The Stanford University School of Medicine is accredited by the Accreditation Council for Continuing Medical Education (ACCME) to provide continuing medical education for physicians.
